Editorial Review

Review

This is an exciting, and perhaps for some controversial, book. With a nuanced sensibility to the originality of Fanon's thought, Bird-Pollan challenges us to rethink the importance of Freud's metapsychology (especially the Oedipus complex) and Hegel's dialectic of recognition on Fanon's thinking about emancipation. (Nigel C. Gibson, Associate Professor, Institute for Liberal Arts and Interdisciplinary Studies, Emerson College)

Bird-Pollan offers an agile analysis of the relationship between negativity and self-integration in Hegel, Freud, and Fanon, challenging the by now standard idea that fragmentation is intrinsic to human subjectivity, and making a strong case for a socio-political understanding of traumatization. (Mari Ruti, Professor of Critical Theory, University of Toronto)
